In April 1972, Gene and Kristine Hughes became herbal pioneers, planting the seeds that became Nature's Sunshine. Plagued with a nagging stomach condition, Gene began taking cayenne pepper at the suggestion of a friend. While the herb provided relief, it was difficult to ingest cayenne pepper by the spoonful. His wife, Kristine, suggested putting the powder into capsules - a revolutionary idea. And thus Nature's Sunshine began with a single innovative idea: Put herbs into capsules to make easy-to-take supplements. Gene and Kristine soon enlisted the aid of family members, including Dick and Pauline Hughes, and began encapsulating cayenne pepper by hand around their kitchen table and offering it to health food stores in their local area.

As they quickly outsold their inventory, the Hughes realized that their innovative idea unlocked a tremendous opportunity. This simple idea, encapsulating herbs, would revolutionize the natural health industry. Since becoming the first US company to encapsulate herbs in 1972, Natures' Sunshine has grown from a small, family-owned business to one of the leading health and wellness companies in the world.

The Hughes, together with their immediate and extended families, put in countless hours and made numerous sacrifices as the company grew from a fledgling startup to a publicly traded, global corporation. Their influence on Natures' Sunshine lives on today, as several members of the Hughes family continue to work at the company in various positions.

And now you know the "rest of the story" of why this company can be trusted to bring you the best quality herbs and supplements.

Common outdoor injuries for kids

Spring has finally arrived! And while time outside enables children to exercise and enjoy the outdoors, it also leads to more occasions for children to get hurt. Here's a look at the most common ways children often hurt themselves, and advice to avoid such injuries.

1. Falls – Kids playing sports is a leading cause of falls. Quality coaching, proper training and appropriate equipment can help reduce injuries. Kids can also fall from trees and trampolines, leading to broken bones, concussions and other injuries. Make sure kids take care when playing in trees and on trampolines.

2. Bicycle injuries – More than

490,000 people were hurt in bicycle accidents last year. The reasons include learning to ride or unsuccessfully trying to master a new cycling trick. The best advice for parents is to have the whole family wear helmets every time they ride.

3. ATV, scooter or other motorized vehicle injuries – It's important for parents to stress to children the potential for danger when using these vehicles. Make sure all children learn the correct way to handle these devices.

4. Burns – Leading causes of childhood burns include fireworks and campfires. Care should be taken that children understand the dangers of fire.

Remember, a few simple safety steps can help avoid painful injuries and trips to your doctor's office.
